

A photograph of a grand, ornate cathedral interior, likely the Basilica of San Juan de los Rios in Havana. The scene is viewed from an elevated position, looking down onto a stage where a musical performance is taking place. The architecture features high, vaulted ceilings with intricate stone carvings and large, arched windows. The lighting is dramatic, with warm yellow tones illuminating the stage and the audience, while the upper parts of the cathedral are in shadow. A large, framed religious painting is visible on the wall behind the stage. The overall atmosphere is one of historical grandeur and cultural celebration.

De la magia y el color.

Through October 21
Museo Nacional de Bellas Artes
(Edificio de Arte Cubano).

The exhibition entitled De la magia y el color (Of Magic and Color) is the tribute paid by the Havana National Museum of Fine Arts to naïf painter Ruperto Jay Matamoros (Santiago de Cuba, 1912 - Havana, 2008) on the centennial of his birth. This exhibition is of 30 pieces of popular art from the late 19th century to the 1990s, from the collection of the National Museum of Fine Arts, which, with few exceptions, have never been exhibited before.

THE MANY FACES OF A CITY

by Amanda Perez

Buildings and people have a strange way of resembling each other. Some houses are sassy and coquette like 15-year-old girls, while some are somber and grave like monks. Many seem to miss the “good old days” of times gone by with the use of cosmetics. Surcos de la ciudad [Furrows of the City] was a project by renowned artists JR (France) and José Parlá (US), exhibited during the 11th Havana Art Biennial... ## HAVANA SURF DOCUMENTARY

by Rod Diaz

"When the Cuban kid paddled up on an Al Merrick I did a double take. I knew we weren't the first foreigners to surf Havana, but how in the hell does a poor kid in Communist Cuba get a board from the world's premier shaper? As he paddled closer and I beheld the gruesome plank beneath him, I realized what I was seeing."

HANSEL & GRETTTEL BRING BALLET TO THE STREET

by Amanda Perez

Grettel Morejón dances like an angel, works like a demon and talks with charismatic clarity, it is an utterly bewitching combination. Gabriel Davalos builds the imaginary castles in the sky outside of the ballet theatre for her and several other dancers from Cuba's premier ballet company who conspire to show that ballet can be beautiful, brilliant and universal – not just an elitist activity in the refined atmosphere of the Gran Theatre of Havana, but along the Malecon, in Parque Almendares, on the railroad tracks and in run down corners of Havana you have never heard of. Gabriel's images are breath-taking, spectacular.

WHAT'S ON HAVANA!

Carpa Trompoloco

The Circuba company consists of about twenty artists, including a sound engineer, and the director. A typical performance lasts for one hour and forty minutes, and includes breath-taking high-wire acrobatics; a clown who rides an extremely small bicycle; the aforementioned pony-tailed gymnasts who, among other stunts, jump through fiery hoops; and the inevitable rumba-dancing dogs.

EL MALECÓN: HAVANA'S SMILE by Victoria Alcalá

On a hot summer day the Malecón will be packed with young lovers, bored housewives and kids. Kids being kids and there being a cool sea over the wall you will see endless jumping, dipping, soaking. And if the right group are in town and you are feeling brave you may see a teenager run barefeet across 4 lanes of traffic launching themselves 20 feet out to land in a shallow pool of water a further 20 feet below.

The 4th Leo Brouwer Chamber Music Festival will be held in Havana from October 3-13, 2012 and will be an exceptional opportunity to enjoy the performances of outstanding Cuban and international musicians from Europe and the Americas. The venues include theaters Karl Marx, Astral, Mella and Nacional as well as several institutions in the capital's Historic Center and the Nacional and Meliá Cohíba hotels. There will be eight special concerts, over 30 national and around 20 world premieres, lectures, debates, talks, film showings, exhibitions, book, CDs and music score launchings, and the awarding of the La Espiral Eterna Prize

EME (M) ALFONSO: UP CLOSE & PERSONAL

by John Waterhouse

It is difficult not to be drawn to Eme (M)'s music, which can be described as a fusion of her strongest influences—R & B, jazz, experimental pop plus the more Cuban folkloric, son and filin styles. The fact that she looks absolutely gorgeous doesn't hurt. So the prospect of sitting down with her last month for a bite to eat and a glass of wine in one of Havana's best new paladares (Rio Mar) was an appealing proposition. Read full article

LA BANDERA CUBANA - ¡VIVA CUBA!

by Victoria Alcalá

The Cuban flag is rectangular with five alternately arranged horizontal stripes of equal width, three turquoise blue and two white, and a red triangle with a five-pointed white star in the middle. Freed of any freemasonic connotations, the star represents the free, independent and sovereign republic of Cuba and Cuban unity; the red triangle stands for equality, fraternity and freedom, and the blood shed in the struggle for independence. *f my flag were torn to pieces
Those who died to make her free
Would raise their arms together
And fight eternally!
From My Flag by Bonifacio Byrne*

Before the national flag was officially hoisted in the Republic of Cuba, different flags from the major powers in the world flew in the Island: the flags of the Catholic Kings, the Spanish House of Bourbon, and Spain from the 16th to the 19th centuries during the colonial period; the flag of Great Britain from August 12, 1762 to July 6, 1763, during the British occupation of Havana; and the flag of the United States of America from January 1, 1899, during the U.S. intervention until May 20, 1902, day that marks the founding of the Cuban Republic. That day, "The Lone Star Banner" was hoisted for the first time in the Morro Castle in Havana.

However, this flag was not the only emblematic symbol that had existed in Cuba. Revolts and conspiracies against Spanish rule dominated Cuban political life throughout the remainder of the century and each of these conspiracies proposed their own flag. Narciso López, a Venezuelan military who had been field marshal of the Spanish Army, headed one of these movements in 1848 for annexation of the island to the United States. Although the plan was discovered and López fled to the United States, their movement had a flag that had been envisaged by the Venezuelan general.

In New York, June 1849, in the home of the poet Miguel Teurbe Tolón, Narciso López asked Teurbe Tolón to make a sketch of that flag. After much discussion about the symbolism of its details, which was greatly influenced by Lopez's Masonic affiliation, it was agreed that it would have three blue stripes representing the military departments in which Cuba had been divided since 1829--Western, Central and Eastern--and two white stripes to ensure their visibility from afar. He thought of a red square, as was customary in other banners, but eventually adopted the equilateral triangle, emblem of the union in freemasonry.

Caroline Glasius-Nyborg's Cuban magic

Caroline Glasius-Nyborg is a freelance photographer who has produced a beautiful set of photos, which seek to convey the atmosphere, the surroundings, the people of Cuba. While there is a lot of waiting, the mechanic in his workshop, the bakers, the man on the train-tracks, there is also though a slow movement in tune with rhythms of the country and in another moment a sprightly pair of 80 year olds are dancing salsa with a passion that belies their age.

DAVID CREEDON:BEHIND OPEN DOORS

by Rod Diaz

Irish photographer David Creedon has been described as a conceptual documentary artist, 'His photographs transcend the documentary form and enter the realm of art, they are poems in photographs'. His recent series on Cuba is no exception to this as he focuses on portraits that document the citizens of Havana in their home environment and capture scenes that are reflective of their character not normally seen. A focus on family is evident and there is a sense that he has captured something far more real than the classic images of rum, salsa, mulatas and classic American cars. Overall this is a great piece of work from a superb master of his craft. Read full article

Mi socio Manolo

Directed by Sarah María Cruz with the excellent performances of René de la Cruz, Jr. and José Ignacio León, Teatro del Sol reruns Eugenio Hernández Espinosa's Mi socio Manolo. This very successful play, with numerous versions since its premiere in 1988, is, according to the Cuban playwright Gerardo Fullea León, "the most heartrending examination made by the theatre in recent times about male chauvinism."

STEPHEN BALLY BRINGS MEISER TO CUBAN THEATRE

by Victoria Alcalá

Stephen Bayly is a man with a mission. Producer, Writer, Director, Former director of the NFTS and Ealing Film Studios, his great passion is bringing the techniques of the renowned Sanford Meisner to Cuban theatre. His work in Cuba over the past six years has been intensive and all-consuming: as well as teaching Cuban directors at the Film School in San Antonio de los Baños he has run a series of workshops to a group of Cuban actors, all on a shoe string budget and with a sprightly energy that belies his 69 years.
